Empowering Women and Children to overcome Poverty, Dependency and Abuse

Women to the World

TRI-ANNUAL REPORT 2010- 2012

President's Message by Founder, Doris Aldrich
 Is it even possible to describe the journey through and out of the horrors of flesh trafficking, genital mutilation, HIV positive youth, extreme poverty, famine, disease, severe infant mortality and domestic abuse? Word pictures could never paint such a joy-filled look back to the road traveled by Women to the World. The success we now enjoy fully compensates for a year of struggle through fear, doubt and often discouragement.

This past year has proven that women worldwide can be trusted to pay back personal micro-loans in the hundreds, village youth will embrace education for a future of hope, and the simple lighting of a health center can save hundreds of lives. Here we have solid proof that we may rest in the fact that micro-business and economic stability indeed empowers women and their families in a march to freedom from abuse and poverty. We have seen the miracle of orphan care producing clear, young minds for advanced education and sustainable employment. Clean water saved lives by the thousands. We held the hand of grateful women in the process of gaining the dignity of economic strength. We now cling to these realities, no longer dreams but a roadmap for the future.

We now cling to these realities, no longer dreams but a roadmap for the future. The success of Women to the World is entirely dependent upon the generosity of donors of means, matched with clarity of thought and a passion for service. The growth of the Board of Directors proves to be a solid foundation for future growth. The PALS Institute Project continues to evolve and produce programs of substance for women in our communities here at home. This volunteer-driven work of compassion has attracted the attention of local universities, colleges, not-for-profit agencies and government-funded organizations, and philanthropic leaders in our midst, initiating partnerships that add strength and exceptional talent. The brave women now enrolled in PALS deserve our dedicated best efforts in the months and years ahead. With your promise, we have made the permanent commitment to them. Personally, I am grateful to God for His incredible blessings and favor on this mission. Together, we are able to face the future with fresh energy and renewed strength. Workers come to us from around the globe to support a vision of "empowering women to overcome poverty, dependency, and abuse."
